1. Introduction

The members of the Japanese Antarctic Research Expedition (JARE-27~29) carried out the biological meteorology at the Yukidori Valley, Langhovde, Antarctica as part of the research project "Studies on the mechanism of the Antarctic terrestrial ecosystems" during the period from 1986 to 1989 (KANDA et al., 1990). They operated three systems for the biological meteorology, i.e., 1) meteorological observation near the biological hut, 2) microclimate observation along the stream at the Yukidori Valley and 3) unmanned microclimate observation near the hut. The data obtained by the latter two systems were published in the series of JARE Data Report No. 152 and No. 163, respectively (OHTANI et al., 1990, 1991).

The present volume is the third report of the three meteorological studies and deals with the meteorological observation data measured near the biological hut for eight months from December 1987 to April 1988 and from November 1988 to January 1989 in order to compare the data with those of Syowa Station. For this system, a term "mesoclimatic" may be suitable toward "microclimatic", but we use merely "meteorological" here. The environmental factors, such as wind direction, wind speed, airtemperature, and relative humidity were determined.

2. Studied Site

The meteorological observation station (MCS-5) was set up 30 m west from a biological hut in the central part of Langhovde (69°15'S, 39°46'E)(Fig. 1). The station is about 7 m above sea level. A low hill (ca. 53 m above sea level) develops on the east side of the site, and a wide flat area expands to the west side of the site and continues to the coasts. The meteorological observation station is shown in Fig. 2. No vegetation occurs around the station.

3. Instruments and Methods

The meteorological data were automatically recorded with a data logger (Chino, Procos VII) for each environmental factor at 30-min intervals at the biological hut. Sensors were connected with the data logger by 30 m long cables. Electric power was supplied by a generator (Yanmar, YDG 3000, 2.7 KVA, alternating current, 100 V) for the data logger, a sensor for relative humidity and for an anemometer with a wind vane. The data recorded with the data logger were transferred to floppy disks and were printed out as digital data using a printer of the data logger. Analog data were continuously recorded using a recorder (Chino, EH800-12).

After the field measurement, sensors of air temperature and relative humidity were brought back to Japan. Calibration checks were made on these instruments.

Summarized in the following (a-d) are the items of measurements, specifications of the sensors, and the calibration procedures in Japan after the field measurement.

a. Wind speed and wind direction

A meteorological anemometer with a wind vane (Koshin Denki, KE-500) was installed on the top of a pole at 10 m above the ground. True north was determined by a magnetic compass and by the sun direction at noon.

b. Air temperature

Air temperature was measured at about 1.5 m above the ground with a platinum resistance thermometer (Nakaasa Keiki, E-732). The thermometer was set in a screen with an electric fan (Nakaasa keiki, E-831) which continuously made 5-6 m/s of air current. Compared with a standard thermometer, the outputs changed in the range of ± 0.2 °C.

c. Relative humidity

Relative humidity was measured at about 1.5 m above the ground with a "Humicap" sensor (Vaisala Co., HMP31UT) in a screen. Calibration checks of the sensor were made by a humidity calibration kit (Vaisala Co., HMK11) in November 1988 and January 1989. The outputs of humidity sensors showed about 3 to 5 % higher value than the values of standard solution of the calibration kit.

d. Correction of measurement errors and data sampling mode

For the all measured elements, measurement errors of each sensor are not added to the data indicated in the following tables. The daily means are indicated for the day when more than 45 data were obtained at 30-min intervals (Tables 2, 3).

Data sampling mode for each environmental factor is shown in Table 1 with those of two data reports of OHTANI et al. (1990, 1991).

4. Notation of Each Table

Acknowledgments

We wish to express our deep gratitude to Dr. O. Watanabe, the leader of JARE-29, and to the members of JARE-28 and JARE-29 for their encouragement and willing cooperation in field work.
